Commerce and Coalitions: How Trade Affects Domestic Political Alignments By Ronald Rogowski

Why do countries differ so greatly in their patterns of political cleavage and coalition? Extending some basic findings of economic theories of international trade, Ronald Rogowski suggests a startling new answer. Testing his hypothesis chiefly against the evidence of the last century and a half, but extending it also to the ancient world and the sixteenth century, he finds a surprising degree of confirmation and some intriguing exceptions.

Editorial Review

Review

Winner of the 1992 Best Book Award of the Political Economy Section of the American Political Science Association

"This is a stimulating and thought-provoking book that should attract a wide readership in several disciplines."--American Historical Review

From the Back Cover

Why do countries differ so greatly in their patterns of political cleavage and coalition? Extending some basic findings of economic theories of international trade, Ronald Rogowski suggest a startling new answer: when international trade expands, owners of locally abundant factors in each country assert themselves more, while owners of scarce factors become defensive.
